Tradition...

Ask anyone from the Bluegrass one question: "What is Lexington's signature restaurant?" Without hesitation, the answer is simple and clear...Columbia Steakhouse. There simply is no other choice.

Since the first day the doors were open in 1948, some seven and a half decades ago, fans of delicious Southern inspired favorites have made Columbia a legendary destination. And it's easy to see why generation after generation continue the tradition.

Mention the words "Nighthawk Special" or "Diego Salad" and it's immediately clear folks are in for a meal that has guests driving in from near and far. To dine at Columbia Steakhouse is as much a part of experiencing Lexington as horse races and fine Kentucky Bourbon.

The stories of the "Old Days" are as entertaining and delicious as the classics that grace the menu. During the early years, Columbia's became a favorite for more than its delicious menu classics. Tales of gambling in the back room and "disorderly conduct" by some of Lexington's most famous and infamous patrons caused a stir and ruffled the feathers of the local authorities. Legend has it that the restaurant was a "front" for gambling and other such activities, full of thick smoke and an air of intrigue. Mention the name "Smitty" and memories of standing in line awaiting your favorite maître d' can't help but make you feel nostalgic.

The legend and lore are long at Columbia Steakhouse. These stories are as seasoned and savory as the many longtime favorites on the menu of this iconic Bluegrass restaurant.

Skip the pretentious and inflated prices of up-and-coming local restaurants. For the true Bluegrass dining experience shared across time and test, Columbia Steakhouse awaits you. We delight in inviting you to become a part of our history.
